Band saw tip passed on by @Tom Lesser: I had a problem with blade drift on an old Walker-Turner 12" saw. I tried all of Alex Snodgrass tips multiple times but couldn't get it right. Stumbled across a YouTube video from someone whose name I don't remember. He suggested table alignment was the issue. Not tilt, but twist ... horizontal twist around the vertical path of the blade. I put a steel ruler flat on the table touching the side of the blade on the flat part between teeth and made sure it was in full contact with the side of blade. If the table is installed accurately the ruler will be perfectly parallel to the miter slot, or to the edge of the table, or a perfect 90-degree angle to the front edge of the table. On my saw, the ruler showed a very noticeable skewing. Alignment was out by about 3/16" over the length of a 13" ruler. I loosened the trunion bolts, tapped the corner of the table until the ruler was parallel to the miter slot, and tightened it up again. For the first time ever I was able to saw a
