It does make sense. I just use this cherry round because it's convenient, about 30 lbs, and I haven't made bowls out of it yet. But you don't want to overclamp a glue up, so it makes sense you can put too much weight on it, too.

I've personally done the test with a glue joint using titebond III. The wood broke, not the glue.

17:28:19 From Paul Hannaby creative-woodturning.com:
Replying to "Ray, it's been used ..."

The paper joint is there to introduce a weak point so when you split the joint later, the paper gives way rather than the wood splitting. The paper joint is strong enough because it's over a relatively large area
